DESCRIPTION OF DÁ AZ, of buildings, gardens, zoo, temples and religious practices transmit a combination of appreciation and disgust, but its report of the defense of the Moctezuma of the religion of him and the conversations of the housekeeper with Cortes are not unpleasant . At the beginning of the next day we left Iztapalapa with a large stock of those great Cacique that I have already mentioned. We proceeded along the raised road that is here eight steps in width and runs so directly to the city of Mexico who does not seem to turn a lot or little, but, wide as it is, it was so crowded with people who was there Barely space for them all, some of them go to and others who return from Mexico, in addition to those who had come out to see us, so that we were not difficult to go from the crowds of them arrived; And the towers and signs were full of people as well as canoes from all parts of the lake. He shouldn't ask himself, because they had never seen horses or men like us. Looking over these wonderful attractions, we didn't know what to say, or if it appeared before us was real, because on the one hand, on earth, there were great city, and in the lake more and more, and the lake itself was crowded of canoes, and in the raised road there were many bridges at intervals, and in front of us there were the great city of Mexico, and we, Á é á,¬ "We don't even have the number four hundred soldiers! And we are well remembered The words and warnings that gave us from the people of Huexotzingo and the Tlaxcala and Tlamanalco, and the many other warnings they had received that we should be careful to enter Mexico, where they would kill us, as soon as they had done inside. Let it leave that The curious readers believe if there is not much to reflect in this that I am writing. What men were there in the world who showed this audacity? But let's go ahead, and March along the raised road. When we arrived á é
